■ What do have in common a western family with an Indian family?

SYNOPSIS

Have you ever had the sensation that what the world shows us is nothing more than a tiny part of what actually exists? With this question in his head, an ex managing director, brought up in Western society, moves to India to live and form part of diverse communities there. And as he gets to know and be warmly-accepted by them, he realises that, behind the differences and stereotypes, there are people very similar to ourselves. A hindu saint, a university student, a faquir ... behind whom we find a father, a sister or a grand dad hidden. They welcome the foreigner with open arms and show him the real meaning of the word, family.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Jesús Menéndez is both a writer and photographer. After 15 years working as a Marketing Director, he decides to change his life. In 2007 he founds Worldbrand Society and begins his first research project, "100 Indian Families tell their story"; and for which he has spent the last few years in different parts of India.
